Texas Digital Library Digital Preservation Environmental Impact Assessment

Dorian McIntush and Sarah Varenhorst, INF 385S: Digital Libraries

Project Goals:

- Determine the current level and/or rate of environmental impact of the digital preservation service
- Find ways TDL members can help to reduce any environmental harm being caused by the service

Data Usage

Institution	AWS	Chronopolis	Total
Arizona State University		104.296 GB	104.296 GB
Baylor University	35.97 TB		35.97 TB
Sam Houston State University		9.185 GB	9.185 GB
Stephen F. Austin University		314.956 GB	314.956 GB
Texas A&M University	5.96 TB	8.94 TB	14.9 TB
Texas State University		40.296 GB	40.296 GB
Texas Woman's University	72.83 GB		72.83 GB
The University of Texas Rio Grande Valley		560.654 GB	560.654 GB
The University of Texas San Antonio		2.997 TB	2.997 TB
Total	42 TB	12.96 TB	54.96 TB

Results

- Chronopolis & AWS (Amazon Web Services) both have made progress towards green energy, however not as much progress as one would expect. For example:
 - Only one of the four Chronopolis nodes plan to be powered 100% by clean energy by 2025 (the UC San Diego center).
 - AWS has nodes around the country, with the largest being in Virginia, and they aren't equally green. TDL's data is replicated in the East Coast data centers, and moving to the West Coast would double costs.
- We are continuing to finalize the report and refine our recommendations for how to help improve the environmental impact of TDL's digital preservation service.
 - For now, we suggest beginning to examine other options for digital preservation services.
