Greetings from the TDL!
tdl.org
A collaborative consortium based in Texas and rooted in higher education, the Texas Digital Library builds capacity among its membership for ensuring equitable access to and preservation of digital content of value to research, instruction, cultural heritage, and institutional memory.

tdl.org
The Texas Digital Library (TDL) will become a nationally recognized leader as a provider of essential, equitable, and sustainable infrastructure for libraries and cultural memory organizations, and its efforts will help to transform society through the radical broadening of access to valuable research, teaching, and cultural heritage materials.

As a center for expertise and excellence, it will be a sought-after partner by other consortia, institutions, and funders, and will serve as a model of community-based collaboration in service of Open Access, Open Data, Open Education, and digital preservation.

TDL's success will be bound to that of our member institutions and their workers. Through our collective efforts, we will prepare and empower a diverse and inclusive library workforce to meet the challenges of the moment by amplifying their unique contributions, enabling sustainable workloads, and fostering mutually supportive communities.

I was learning DSpace with other Texas librarians with varying levels of experience with repositories. It was an incredibly productive day, and the relationships I formed at that first training 10 years ago continue today.

There are many ways that TDL has helped me and my institution, but if I have to pick one, I'll go with the TDL user groups I am a part of. During those meetings users share new programs and ideas and we work through our challenges. These groups also have listservs that allow us to communicate with each other quickly to solve problems related to our IRs and journals and offer opportunities to connect individually with others.

The community of people fosters collaboration, inclusion, openness, and support for learning, leading, and continuous improvement (not just for institutions, but for individuals). I can't stress enough how important this has been for me as a non-librarian in a relatively new career launching a new position at our library and on our campus. I'd have had to go it alone in a local vacuum without this broader perspective and support.

Amplify global discovery of your cultural heritage materials.
TDL has facilitated bringing a number of digital preservation educational events to Texas. These courses and camps have directly benefited me in my work developing a digital preservation program at my institution. TDL’s emphasis on and support for digital preservation services have been indispensable in helping me accomplish my goals.

In so many ways, I have had the opportunity to grow as a leader in chairing a TDL User Group. I have had the opportunity to serve on awards and conference planning committees. I have grown in my knowledge from the network of TDL members, and I have learned so much! I love the wholesome, welcoming, and inclusive environment TDL has curated, especially because of the fact that I have only met some people briefly in person over the last couple of years.

Amplify your unique contributions.
When I first moved to Texas, TCDL was my first opportunity to present my work, and start to create a community of professionals that I am still learning from and collaborating with.

The TDL membership includes all different sized institutions, and public and private schools. This diversity in institution-type provides for very rich conversations at TCDL and in TDL working groups.

Foster a community of practice
I would not be where I am without TDL. TDL has provided me opportunities to serve on groups and to network with colleagues around the state. I appreciate the deep community I have found through this organization.
